As companies expand operations into the global marketplace, they rely on their in-house law departments to structure the cross-border transactions and comply with local law. To provide these legal services on a global scale, many law departments have staff in different jurisdictions and must find ways to efficiently and effectively manage their teams and resources.

This Practice Note discusses key considerations and practical steps to take when managing a global law department. It addresses the assessment of the legal team, alignment of legal services with business needs, reporting structure of the department, team-building and global communication, engagement and retention of team members, training
